

If Houston was to take office, there will be major economic reform to get the country back in order. First, we will raise taxes, create more jobs, and also edit the current welfare system to better the government. These reforms will take major actions but in the long run, will help the economy greatly.

The first thing that Houston will do is to raise taxes. We will do this by raising taxes for everyone but it will be based off of income. The rich will pay more taxes as the lower income families will be paying less. Percentage rates for the rich will increase to a 30% tax rate on income. For a lower income family, the tax rates will not exceed a maximum of 15%. This will help poverty rates drop as the income of families will increase from the tax percentage.

The next reform that will take place is the creation of new jobs. We will do this by limiting trade and creating new manufacturing companies in the United States. This will increase the job rate and also create more revenue for the country. This decision will decrease poverty rates and limit foreign ties. The more jobs in the United States, the less we have to depend on other countries to get products. This will decrease the amount of money spent across the globe and even decrease the money owed to other countries.

The final reform that will be put into place is the new welfare system. The welfare system sounds great on paper but can easily be taken advantage of. We have a new form that is hard to take advantage of and benefit those that need it. First, the welfare system will only help those who have lost a job. This implies that the person has been in a job earning income then suddenly dropped or fired. The person can apply for welfare that will help him for the next three months. This moves onto the next part, the length. The welfare period will be shortened to three months or until that person has earned a job. This is so a person is not able to take advantage of the revenue from unemployment for the rest of their lives. Another edit is that there is a two year buffer that a person must go through before he or she is able to apply for welfare again. The person must be in a job for at least two years before a person is eligible for welfare again. This does not include someone working for a year then waiting an entire year for welfare. A person must be in a job for two years.

The last and final edit is that the amount of money is based off of multiple factors. The first being amount of family that is in the house. The people that are considered “family” must be blood related. This includes children, wife, or parents, not a buddy looking for a place to stay. The next factor is who else in the house is earning welfare? Is your mother, wife, son, or daughter earning welfare? If they are, they are not included in your pay of welfare and their welfare pay is deducted too. This is so a family can strive for a couple months so they can get back into a job so they can support themselves again.

Economic reform is on the way when Huston is elected. She plans to change the way our economics run to make them smoother and more reliable to not only the nation but to the government itself. We will lose our debt and have more people out of poverty and out of the house supporting themselves.
